“Why does the city feel so good right now?”

The 2017 edition of Beakerhead included Canada 150 programming where the city core became a larger-than-life version of the game of Snakes and Ladders. Fourteen art installations across six neighbourhoods were connected by the story of human ingenuity.

More than 145,000 people were engaged in Beakerhead this year. Tourists from across Canada came to visit and the largest single event, Beakernight, attracted a record-breaking 59,000 people. This year, 70% of the 200+ artists involved were from the Calgary region.

With the popularity and affection for Beakerhead exploding, and five successful years under its belt, it looks like Beakerhead is here to stay as a massive mainstream science culture event – and will be a defining force in the next generation of Calgary’s – and Canada’s – reputation as a creative and enterprising city.
I wasn’t sure what to expect heading into volunteering at Beakerhead but it was, by far, the best volunteer experience I’ve had …. It was hard not to be excited the whole time.”

WHY BEAKERHEAD MATTERS

Beakerhead looks and feels like one of the most engaging and delightful ways to you could spend five glorious days in September.

Look a little deeper and you’ll see that Beakerhead couldn’t be more important to our future – as individuals, as companies and as a culture.

Beakerhead is a year-round organization whose programs are designed to eliminate barriers, so everyone can reach their full potential. Winter, spring and summer programs inspire people of all ages and cultures, from across the city, province, country and world to build and exhibit works of interactive entertainment. People learn-by-doing and exuberant expression of art and ingenuity explode, with science and engineering at their heart. All of this year-round activity culminates in a spectacular five-day phenomenon of art, science and engineering each September, giving even more people a chance to see, touch, do and create. Adults are engaged and kids are changed.

“Thank you so much for hosting and organizing such an incredible evening last night! My colleagues and I have received numerous messages from guests thanking us for a professional, fun, and unique corporate experience. I think this Beakerhead experience may become a new tradition for our company.”

COMMUNITY CAPACITY BUILDING

In 2017, several signature programs and projects reached new heights.

REMARKABLE EXPERIENCES FOR TOURISTS

Big Bang Residency Program
The results of the second artist-and-engineer residency program came to life. A theatrical artwork called the Calgary Municipal Space Station took over the Calgary Tower for a week and offered visitors a VR experience and playful look at the future of public transit. The Big Bang Residency Program is a partnership with the Banff Centre and funded by Calgary Arts Authority and the Calgary Hotel Association.

PLATFOR FOR PARTNERS

Sold out workshops and rave reviews
It’s not the usual suspects attending quirky shows, exhibits and workshops staged by community partners. New audiences are mixing and growing, according to partners. The criteria for inclusion as a Beakerhead event? Simple. A willingness to warmly welcome people from all walks of life to an experience that reduces social friction between traditional silos. Science, meet art. Art, meet engineering. Engineering, meet everyone. The delight is palpable.

CAPACITY BUILDING

Snakes and Ladders
Almost three quarters of the presenters in Beakerhead’s special Canada150 programming called Snakes and Ladders were regional artists and engineers. The two-way conversation between Calgary creativity and the world is ignited!

ALBERTA CULINARY TOURISM ALLIANCE

Engineered Eats
27 restaurants across Calgary served 960 menus items, including appetizers, entrees and drinks, over a week of culinary creativity with the 2017 theme ingredient: barley.

YEAR ROUND EDUCATION

Moonshot Program

“I remember attending the very first Beakernight – which I loved at the time – but it was nothing compared to this year’s Beakernight and the thousands and thousands of people who came out. It is great to see Beakerhead grow in both calibre and popularity over the years.”
